

On behalf of the University of Cambridge it is with great pleasure that I welcome Mr. Luo Hong, one of China's best known photographers and environmentalists, to exhibit his work at the University's Sedgwick Museum.

Luo Hong has an impressive track record of promoting concern and care for the environment, through his remarkable pictures of Africa and China. I have no doubt that exhibiting these pictures in Cambridge will inspire all of us to strive for better conservation of natural habitats across the globe.

I am very pleased to hear that this exhibition was organised by CEEDS - a student society from this University with its mission of bridging communication gaps between the UK and China. Exchanges and partnerships between Cambridge and China are growing in number and flourishing – spanning research, education, and cultural activities – and I am delighted to have CEEDS' energetic participation. I also would like to pass on my sincere thanks to the UN Environment Programme (UNEP) and the Sedgwick Museum, who have worked tirelessly with CEEDS over the past three months to make this event possible.

I hope that members of the University will come along and support this unique exhibition, which runs from June 14 until July 3. I wish you every success.
